TALKING TO YOUR ADMINISTRATOR

If your school district does not offer FCS classes ...

“What can I do as a parent to encourage the school district to add FCS classes?”

“What input and information can I provide that might be beneficial to the possibility of the school district adding FCS classes in middle school and high school?”

“What specific people on the school board, at the district offices, or at the schools should I contact to provide them with input and information?”

If your school district already offers FCS classes ...

“Does the school district offer classes in workforce development, personal finance, parenting education, child development, foods and nutrition, and healthy living?”

“Does the school district understand the importance of having certified instructors teach FCS subject matter?”

“What can I do as a parent to encourage the school district to continually assess, expand, and promote its FCS classes?”

If your school district has decided to stop offering FCS classes ...

“What can I do as a parent to encourage the school district to continue offering FCS classes?”

“What input and information can I provide that might convince the school district to reconsider the decision not to continue FCS classes?”

“What specific people on the school board, at the district offices, or at the schools might be willing to re-assess the decision not to continue FCS classes?”
